Family Systems Theory is a new way of thinking about any network of interlocking relationships, e.g. a family, a business, an educational institution or a church, to name a few.

It was developed after WW II by a group of mental health professionals who were no longer satisfied by the "diagnose and prescribe" medical model.

Although many professionals are familiar with the benefits of "thinking systems," few have received an in-depth explanation of the theory behind the family systems movement.

To that end The Center for Family Systems Theory of WNY has developed a 30-hour course designed to introduce you to the theory through a healthy mix of didactic presentations, case studies and classroom participation. No papers or required reading.
